PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

05:25 Rupert Sheldrake: “And so in human family groups we’d expect the same kind of morphic fields [as in other animal family groups]. . . . It would mean that family fields, with their morphic fields, would have a kind of memory from the families that contributed to them. The father’s and mother’s families of origin would come together in a family.”

12:12 Rupert: “Whatever the merits or demerits of [\[Bert\] Hellinger’s system](#), which I think is very interesting and apparently very effective, the idea of making models of the family field seems to me something that one could address in a more general sense.”

20:29 Terence McKenna: “The family thing works because people really are complex chemical systems with genetic affinity.”

PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

05:25 Rupert Sheldrake describes how one could go about creating a “consumer’s report” for odd-ball theories.

06:23 Terence McKenna: “Ninety-five percent of the scientists who have rejected astrology cannot cast a natal horoscope, and that the ability to actually cast a horoscope never seemed to be required of these high-toned scientific critics of astrology. It was something they felt perfectly free to dismiss without understanding.”

07:26 Ralph Abraham: “Well, the hypothesis of causative formation, of course, favors deeper fluff. . . . The thing about astrology is that people say it works. An argument could be made that even though the Zodiacal reference frame that it is based on no longer has any basis in the sky that it works because people believe in it, and because it is in the N-field, and that because it’s deeper fluff, basically.”

02:09 Terence McKenna: “Somehow as a part of the agenda of political correctness it has become not entirely acceptable to criticize, or demand substantial evidence, or expect people, when advancing their speculations, to make, what used to be called, old fashioned sense.”

04:10 Terence: “These phenomenon, which we know exist, and which we find rich in implication, would simply not be allowed as objects of discourse, they would be ruled out of order. So there’s something wrong on one level with what’s called empiricism, skepticism, positivism, it has different names.”

PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

03:08 Terence McKenna: “Another way of thinking of it (the Knot of Eternity) is it’s the nexus of connectivity. It’s a place where everything is cotangent, as the mathematicians say. Everything is connected, and I think that's the place we are growing toward."

07:30 Ralph Abraham: "If a present moment is between a past that's familiar and a future which is completely different, then that's a very special moment."

10:18 Rupert Sheldrake: Begins a brief explanation of his theory of morphic resonance.

PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

07:58 Terence McKenna:

"People should be allowed to let the apocalypse happen, not make it happen."

09:35 Rupert Sheldrake:

"I would say that the Big Bang cosmology, which is an apocalyptic vision of history, with an explosive beginning and therefore implying an explosive end, is a kind of projection of this Judeo-Christian model of history. It's not just confined to churches and synagogues. It's the myth which encloses our entire scientific world view, which has grown up within this Judeo-Christian matrix."

12:35 Terence:

"This is not paranoia. Paranoia? The Earth is on fire, haven't you heard? There's no reason to worry about being too paranoid. You can lift your foot off that pedal. It's OK. You can go with that intuition now. The planet is on fire."

PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

02:31 Terence McKenna:

“[The apocalypse] seems to be the unique, unifying thread throughout the Western religions. Most insistently of all religious systems on Earth, it is the Western systems that have insisted on appointing an end to their world.”

05:07 Terence:

“At the folkloric level, the attractor of the end of the world is very strong.”

07:47 Terence:

“And these religions, which have anticipated this thing in this rather crude end of the world scenario are somehow on to something, something that is, I think, a message that is coming from the biological level, if you will, about the inherent instability of the world.”

02:39 Rupert Sheldrake:

“The other side of this is the reform of the existing professions.”

05:24 Ralph Abraham:

“Somehow there would have to be a miracle to get the whole system onto a new track.. And the revascularization aspect that we are mostly longing for might never happen. We need to trigger it.”

07:37 Rupert:

“I’m thinking of a pioneering experiment in a limited area.”

PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

03:15 Rupert Sheldrake:

“The present educational system mimics the initiation process and indeed is a kind of initiation process.”

07:18 Rupert:

“And indeed it is the scientific priesthood envisaged by Bacon in the scientific world, the academic model and the priestly role as the higher initiates in running and ordering society, the more-educated.”

08:40 Rupert:

“You can see this whole new frame of mind being introduced in the entire third world through UNESCO and through educational things. And the first step is literacy, you’ve got to have them reading and writing, because then you can get it across that what’s in books is actually more important than what you feel or experience.” »

07:18 Rupert Sheldrake:

“If there were to be a true Mother Earth religion develop, it would obviously have priestesses rather than priests because its central figure was a goddess. It would be relating human life to the Earth, first and foremost . . . it wouldn't have much emphasis on the stars or the heavens.”

08:49 Terence McKenna:

“But if this Anima Mundi thing got going, this is not a fine tuning of Christianity this is, at last, the overthrow of it. . . . no more this patriarchal, masculine, dominator thing that has descended down through monotheism.” » Continue reading “Podcast 074 – “The Resacularization of the World” \(Part 2\)”

PROGRAM NOTES:

(Minutes : Seconds into program)

03:48 Ralph Abraham:

“So eventually the 60s happened, and probably my first experience that I would now identify as a real religious experience was the experience of LSD.”

07:17 Ralph:

“What’s gone wrong in the world now is a loss of connection to the sacred within and without organized religion.”

13:30 Ralph:

“The revascularization of music, I think, is very important. If I had to point to a single factor that I thought was destroying society faster than any other I think it would be evil music.”

I read it all, but please don't have your feelings hurt if you don't get a reply ... just too much to handle and still write and do podcasts . . . but that's a good thing :-)!
